

ALL THAT WILL BE NEW

ALL THAT WILL BE NEW

Poems

Paul Mariani

S L / . N T
B O O K S

ALL THAT WILL BE NEW

Poems

Copyright © 2022 Paul Mariani. All rights reserved. Except for brief quotations in critical publications or reviews, no part of this book may be reproduced in any manner without prior written permission from the publisher. Write: Permissions, Slant Books, P.O. Box 60295, Seattle, WA 98160.

Slant Books
P.O. Box 60295
Seattle, WA 98160

www.slantbooks.com

HARDCOVER ISBN: 978-1-63982-111-2

PAPERBACK ISBN: 978-1-63982-112-9

EBOOK ISBN: 978-1-63982-113-6

Cataloguing-in-Publication data:

---

Names: Mariani, Paul.

Title: All that will be new: poems / Paul Mariani.

Description: Seattle, WA: Slant Books, 2022.

Identifiers: ISBN 978-1-63982-112-9 (hardcover) | ISBN 978-1-63982-111-2 (paperback) | ISBN 978-1-63982-113-6 (ebook)

Subjects: LCSH: American poetry.

Classification: PS3563.A6543 A45 2022 (paperback) | PS3563.A6543 (ebook)

---

For Eileen, who made it all so possible. And so real.

Contents

Prologue: Northeaster at Prout's Neck | xi

I

First Light Last | 3

The Carpenter | 5

Poor Fauvette | 7

Wheat Field with Cypresses | 9

It Happens All the Time | 11

Huddie | 12

Elegy for Our 131-Year-Old Catalpa | 13

Instructions for Leaving Behind a Broken World | 15

Snow Moon over Singer Island | 16

The Poet as Eighty-Year-Old Sous-Chef | 17

One More Token of Beauty for the Taking | 18

II

Those Beloved Ghosts of Compiano | 23

A Sunday Afternoon on the Island of Grande Jatte | 26

Williams's Paterson Those Years Ago | 28

All That Will Be New in the World | 29

A Brief History of Cotton | 31

Harriet | 32

That Morning after the Assassination of Malcolm X | 33

Guernica | 36

On the Isonzo: Giuseppe Ungaretti, August 16th, 1916 | 38

One By One They Fall | 40

Covid Boogie | 41
Epiphany 2021 | 43
When Reality Hits | 45

III

A Periplus of Poets | 49
Remembering Phil Levine | 54
Separated by 2477 Miles, I Laugh with Bob Pack over the Phone | 56
Emily Waves from Her Bedroom Window as We Pass By | 58
The Other Side | 59
And Now | 60
The Call | 62
News That Stays News | 64
The Wheel, the Wheel. . . | 66
Supper at Emmaus | 67
Acknowledgments | 69

On this side it descends with power to end one's memory of sin; and on the other,
it can restore recall of each good deed.

To one side, it is Lethe; on the other,
Eunoè; neither stream is efficacious unless the other's waters have been tasted:

their savor is above all other sweetness.

—Dante, Purgatorio XXVIII. Translated by Allen Mandelbaum.

PROLOGUE: NORTHEASTER AT PROUT'S NECK

The primordial tensions of those natural forces.
Watch, as the massive waves surge forward, then back out into the vast Atlantic, as if sucked into some blueblack vortex, even as another wave and then another comes crashing in to smash against the jagged granite shore.

The silver glitter spume explodes just feet away, as old and now instant as that whirlwind confronting Job.
How is it Homer caught the drama in his Northeaster, just yards from that rustic cabin there on Prout's Neck along the coast of Maine back then? And now the painting glowers in the cloister-like environs of the New York Met, replete with a sleepy guard.

Homer caught it all. Schoolkids playing crack the whip in those fields outside some one-room schoolhouse. Those three Confederate prisoners surrendering at Petersburg, to be interrogated by a Union officer, one a hillbilly kid, another an old man lost, and that young rebel officer, hand on hip, his steady sullen staring in defiance even now.

Then, later, those Southern whites and blacks in those unforgiving years of Reconstruction, that white mistress standing awkwardly by the door, not knowing what to say to her former slaves, nor they to her. Or those English working classes, the Bermuda natives among the sands and palmettos, the dangers of the sea, the drifting boat with a lone black man as sharks circle him with a typhoon rising in the distance. And in time even people disappear from his canvasses, and it's the sea alone the painter dwells on as at Creation's start.

As with the poet who must face the blank canvas of the page and stare and stare and stare again.

And then, if he is blessed (or cursed) a word at last comes uttering forth. And then another and another. And then a line, a force, a tension felt between a gray, a cobalt blue, a green, a dash of red, an orange dot, and a smear of white to say this is a painting. And then another swirl of white as three waves spill, and then that giant wave exploding, again, again, again, as the thing itself, the real, comes crashing finally down on you.

I

FIRST LIGHT LAST

You arrive at enough certainty to be able to make your way, but it is making it in darkness.

*Don't expect faith to clear things up for you. It is trust, not certainty.
—Flannery O'Connor*

And did you really think there would ever come a time when things would go as you dreamed they should?
That you—you!—could hold the reins of some phaeton-fated Seven Thirty Seven as first it whinnied then shrugged off what you tried to make it do? You, you poor forked thing, screaming as the plane bucked before it nosedived down down and down into the unforgiving earth below?

*Late January, Covid-killing time, and six below.
Sing it, pilgrim! Sputter those words out loud!
You're in the bughouse now. Oh, yeah!
You're in the bughouse now.*

Remember that time, thirty years back, in those sea-fungus-riddled-pitchblack tunnel mazes of Fort Adams?
How a woman tripped and fell just behind you and you turned to help her up again, even as the guide and those in front kept moving on, your wife among them, as she slid into the dark and disappeared, like some Eurydice?

Remember (ha!) the blank fear you felt as you moved slowly forward, leading the others nowhere, first turning right then left, as you called out and the chambers echoed their muffled sounds behind you and it hit you how you might just be leading yourself and all those others into some instant hell, some underworld, where the lost are trapped and will forever dwell.

*Sing it, then, Homer, Hezekiah, Virgil. Sing!
Sing the desolation of those words. Go on! Sing!
You're in the bughouse now.
Oh yeah, sick seer, sad sod,
You're in the bughouse now.*

Remember how you glimpsed that glimmer of light somewhere up ahead, then slowly groped your way down the tunnel toward it, only to come up against that small grilled window, that ignis fatuus, that dead end that had seemed to hold out hope, before it laughed and mocked you? You, blind leader of the blind?

And then, in that darkness, in that mocking hell hole of a maze, as those groans and curses swelled around you, a light flickered and our guide appeared and we followed her, this way then that, until we reappeared once more, thank God, thank God, into the dazzle-dazzling bluebell light, as the others, my Eurydice among them, cheered.

*Sing it! Sing the sacred saving words, again and then again and then again.
De profundis clamavi ad te Domine. . . .
Out of the depths I cry to thee, O Lord,
Pray for us, Mother, now and at the hour of our death.
Sing those praises from first light on into the night, and on,
until the blessed dawn leads us home again.*